Radio Sarang reaches out to unreachable sections of society

HARSHA MANGALURU, DUNS

Jayaprakash Yekkur, who runs a laundry shop in Kankandiy, is a familiar face at many fish markets located across the city.

Jayaprakash visits fish markets in order to highlight how plastic menace is polluting beaches and wrecking havoc with the marine ecosystem. He does not lecture, but stands in the market with a placard, urging people queuing up to buy fish, to avoid single-use plastics.

Jayaprakash took upon the responsibility of creating awareness on minimising the use of plastic after being motivated by listening to a programme aired by the Radio Sarang (107.8 FM).

The awareness programme was one among the series of episodes made under 'Shuddha Jala, Shuddha Neela, Arogyavaginali, Jeena Satbhaha', informs Radio Sarang programme co-ordinator Abhishek Shetty.

Radio Sarang's programmes have gone beyond the four walls of its studio to the St. Aloysius College (SAC) campus to achieve the desired impact. Marketing executive Shwetha and Editor Lobo said conversations based on the programmes were conducted. It is because of an initiative by the Radio Sarang and Ramakrishna Mission, as many as 50 people are producing compost from waste, with help of pot compost method.

Radio Sarang has ensured a wider audience for its programmes under the Shuddha Jala... by integrating programmes with social media. Abhishek says apart from making audio programmes, the team also releases posters about the upcoming programmes and video documentaries on social media. A video documentary on Padu Panambur gram panchayat's successful initiatives like check dams to increase water level in wells has received wide appreciation.

Radio Sarang associate director Fr Melwyn Pinto informs that their awareness programmes had reached out to the 'unreachable' sections like visually impaired who have no access to internet. This was revealed during the feedback sessions and response from listeners to live programmes.

"Some grievances of listeners were also addressed during the interviews with the panchayat development officers and Dalbhina Kamada Zilla Panchayat chief executive officer Dr. Selvamani R," informs Fr Melwyn Pinto.
